Performance and Portfolio Comment

Market overview

Global equities, as measured by the MSCI All Country World Index (ACWI), fell around 2% over the month, but performance diverged sharply by region and style. The US (MSCI USA) was down roughly 3%, while markets outside the US (MSCI ACWI ex USA) rose about 1%, highlighting a broadening of returns beyond American equities.

Style leadership also flipped. Growth stocks struggled, with MSCI ACWI Growth down nearly 4%, while MSCI ACWI Value gained around 1%. In other words, investors favoured cheaper, more cyclical parts of the market and reduced exposure to higher-multiple growth.

Two themes stood out on the positive side. First, ongoing data-centre capital expenditure continued to support selected growth areas linked to AI infrastructure and cloud build-out. Second, energy stocks contributed strongly to value-style outperformance, benefiting from supportive commodity dynamics and improved cash generation.

On the negative side, markets increasingly focused on the threat of AI-driven disruption to established business models, particularly in software and other “white-collar” service industries. This concern weighed heavily on sentiment and valuations across growth sectors and was a major driver of the month’s weaker performance for growth-oriented equities.
