Commentary

The Select International Alpha Fund returned 6.08% for the month to be up +14.42% over the past year (net, after fees).

Following a record year of elections globally and the uncertainty that it creates for markets, we move towards year-end with the US Election finally behind us. The Republican clean sweep of the Senate, House, Electoral College (President) and popular vote adds some predictability for markets on what to expect over the next four years. More predictability generally implies lower volatility.

Some of the key Trump policies will be supportive for equity markets and has led to lower equity market volatility (VIX Index) post the Election results. The combination of lower corporate tax rates, less regulation, lower government spending plus a focus on energy independence and lower input costs for corporate America is supportive for growing aggregate earnings. US equity markets have benefited in the past with lower corporate tax policies supporting investor sentiment.

The uncertainty for markets will be the unfunded liabilities of the tax cuts, the magnitude of the upcoming tariffs and the impact on tradable good prices. This has put some pressure on long bond yields and resulting in some additional steepening of the yield curve in anticipation of the tax cut stimulus. Unlike the lower equity market volatility, bond market volatility will remain elevated for now. Hence equity markets are enjoying the tailwind of the anticipated Trump policies and bond markets remain cautious.

The various scenarios regarding the degree of tariffs are unpredictable. It is true they are inflationary; however, this would be partially offset with a strengthening USD. Tariffs with China have now been in place since the first Trump term and continued under the Biden administration. This is an example of a rare common policy alignment as the US economy has adjusted with the current tariff regime.

The success of the Chinese export sector despite the higher tariffs and trade tensions with the US over the past eight years will be tested. Given the success of China's export sector, the additional tariffs will add additional headwinds for the second largest economy that is going through significant domestic economic challenges following their property construction collapse.

Despite the uncertainty regarding global trade and geo-political tension, investors would be wise to not take the Trump rhetoric literally, but definitely take him seriously.

The US Fed has scope to continue to lower cash rates however this will be measured and the cash rate cut cycle a shallow one. The 25bps Fed rate cut post the US Election was already priced into markets and the current 4.5%-4.75%. A more normalised 3.75%-4.0% remains a realistic low in the current cycle. Globally, other key economies, particularly in the EU and the UK will require additional interest rate cut stimulus if core inflation measures allow.

The overweight and focus on disruptive technologies is the core investment theme from the London based investment team lead by Mark Hawtin (who have managed this fund since January 2023).
