Commentary

The Select International Alpha Fund returned +0.57% for the month compared to the index of -1.6% to be up +6.2% fiscal-year-to-date (net, after fees). The Fund has performed well during a period of elevated market volatility.

Market sentiment has steadily improved from the extreme volatility events that began from the tariff announcements in early April. While the headlines during spikes of market turmoil are frequently very negative and challenge investor confidence, remaining objective and looking at the data implications and scenarios ahead is important. A constant reminder that remaining alert but not alarmed is always a good starting point when there is amplified market volatility.

On the economic outlook front, the IMF in late April lowered global growth expectations from 3.3% to 2.8% for 2025 noting concerns amid policy shifts and new uncertainties. The IMF also noted that global headline inflation is expected to decline further, notwithstanding upward revisions in some countries. The 2025 GDP downgrades were larger than anticipated as they highlighted risks to the outlook are tilted to the downside as escalating trade tensions and elevated policy-induced uncertainty may further hinder growth. However, any early resolution in trade outcomes would be positive for global growth momentum and there can be some room for growth upgrades later in the year.

The recent risk-on positive market sentiment is simply a partial recovery of the extreme pessimism exhibited in mid-April. Given economic conditions have not been as badly impacted as feared, market valuations have recovered in anticipation of US earnings upgrades. While the US profit cycle, which has been very strong for a number of consecutive years, is anticipated to slow, they still remain positive and early April EPS downgrades will quickly be followed by upgrades. Look forward, some ongoing US corporate resilience should not be discounted.

As sentiment continues to improve investors should still anticipate further (and frequent) volatility events ahead but not as extreme as seen in early April. Markets have also priced in multiple Fed rate cuts in the second half of this year which will be supportive for earnings and credit conditions going forward. The recent wait and see approach from the US Fed looks like sound monetary policy as they maintain their focus on core measures of inflation and look towards the hard economic data profile before acting. Further, US tax cuts (both corporate and at the household level) combined with more de-regulation will be supportive and a positive tailwind later this year.

For the Fund is managed by the London based investment team at Liontrust lead by Mark Hawtin (who have managed this fund since January 2023).
