Commentary

The Liontrust Select International Alpha Fund returned +2.97% for the month to be +4.2% year-to-date and +14.63% over the past year (net, after fees). The Fund has continued to perform well during periods of elevated market volatility.

Markets have remained on high alert with the escalation of the conflict between Israel-Iran. The safe haven trade is anticipated to continue in the short term however markets continue to look through the conflict to gauge the outcome over the year to economic data, credit conditions and the earnings outlook. With all short-term unexpected events, perspective is always important. Markets respond quickly to uncertainty with the initial spike in volatility, particularly with regard to geo-political escalations in sensitive regions that always dominate the news media headlines. However, the rally for equity markets and risk assets in general over the past month post the tariff tantrums has been very impressive.

More broadly, investors have benefited from a very strong market rally from the April lows (just over 20% for some equity markets) as global markets recovered over the past six weeks following the extreme market volatility in April that was triggered by the tariff uncertainty. Some markets have reached all-time highs as the prospect of earnings downgrades is no longer as bad as initially thought. We continue to see more frequent volatility events over the remainder of the year.

Importantly, US economic conditions remain resilient, and the earnings and credit cycle outlook remain reasonable although slowing. Some sentiment indicators remain soft due to the unresolved US trade policies however aggregate economic conditions do not look to be as weak as some thought earlier this year. Hence the pragmatic approach from the US Fed is to pause and review before cutting rates further in the second half of the year. The Fed is aware of the upcoming US tax cuts (both corporate and at the household level), which combined with more deregulation, will be supportive and a positive tailwind. This will impact the degree of rate US cuts over the coming year. Given US core inflation remains in check, we view the prospect of two Fed rate cuts in the second half of the year.

The various survey data have been weak and there are a number of moving parts that have concerned investors. The tariff tantrums will lead to some weakness in global growth this year with estimates of around 0.5-0.8% range of detractor. However, the higher supply of oil from the Saudi's, the largest OPEC supplier, will in effect act as a stabiliser and add back half of the tariff impacted weakness. Further, the US energy independence (via shale) will also help keep energy prices lower than expected.

EU indicators remain mixed with a weak outlook anticipated despite the continued rate cuts by the ECB. More ECB rate cuts may be required despite some core inflation headwinds, as well as a large amount of German government bond issuance anticipated to meet their increased defence spending commitments. Some other key EU countries are also working through their parliamentary processes to meet higher fiscal spending on defence. The higher EU defence spending implies much more bond (debt) issuance but will be stimulatory (defence stocks benefit) in the coming years.

The Fund is managed by the London-based investment team at Liontrust led by Mark Hawtin (who has managed this fund since January 2023).
