Commentary

The Liontrust Select International Alpha Fund returned +0.79% for the month to be +13.8% over the past year (net, after fees). The Fund has continued to perform well since partnering with the Liontrust global team nearly three years ago. The fund has delivered +16.13% p.a. (net, after fees) over this period that has seen frequent periods of elevated market volatility.

Portfolio review:

The largest contributors to portfolio performance over the month came from AI beneficiaries. In the AI infrastructure basket, the long SK Hynix (+58% in US dollar terms) benefited from surging demand for AI memory chips, particularly HBM3E and DDR5 for servers. The company posted record Q3 profits and announced mass production of HBM4, securing full capacity bookings into 2026. Strategic partnerships with OpenAI and Broadcom further boosted sentiment. In the AI software basket, the long Snowflake (+22%) surged following Q3 results and revenue growth of 32% year-on-year, driven by enterprise adoption and strong customer retention which led to raised full-year guidance.

Elsewhere the consumer basket benefited from a number of the shorts in the fast food retailing sector posting disappointing results, which aligns with our theme of a weak US consumer.

Detractors over the month included BayCurrent Consulting (-22%) which fell in early October on what appeared to be profit-taking, dragging down the digitalisation basket. Here, shorts also dragged as a number of names rose in the month.

China was also a weak theme as renewed investor caution over China's regulatory environment and geopolitical risks led to some profit taking following strong year-to-date performance.

Portfolio changes:

We added a new position in Marvell over the month; Amazon's Q3 results confirmed strong Trainium 2/3 (custom AI chips) demand, which is key for Marvell. Coupled with strong capex guidance from the other hyperscalers within results, this has given us renewed confidence in Marvell's ability to exceed current market estimates for growth.

We pared back some China exposures, selling Baidu but maintaining a net long.

In the digitalisation basket, we added to the shorts - taking advantage of what we feel is a rally in some lower quality names.

We ended the month with net exposure of 37% and gross of 136%, somewhat lower than average reflecting a more cautious stance into the final months of the year.

The Fund is managed by the London based investment team at Liontrust led by Mark Hawtin (refer corporate bio below). The globally based investment team have managed this fund since January 2023. Over this period the three-year annualised performance has been +12.3% (net, after all fees).
